Broadband Home Guide

Whether you're using your home broadband service to monitor healthcare devices, to watch high-definition (HD) movies or newscasts, for homework assignments or for video gaming, you'll need a broadband Internet service that works predictably and dependably. And always keep in mind that every new generation of devices brings with it a need for more speed.

Today's devices often have applications that are using broadband in the background, even when you're not actively browsing or streaming. Many people use more than one device at a time to access the web—for example, a television and a smartphone or tablet—and many households have parents, teens, or kids online at the same time. As the demand on your system increases, you will most likely find you need a higher-speed broadband connection.

Video streaming, whether it's for entertainment, news, online classes or telecommuting for work, requires the most broadband. The minimum recommended speed for HD video streaming is a 25 Mbps download. If other activities are happening during that video streaming, you'll want to remember that all devices are sharing the connection speed and more devices means you'll require more broadband.

We know that our fiber network can deliver all the broadband you need, and if you're experiencing any trouble with your connection we'd like to help you determine if the problem is with the router or with one of your devices, or if you simply need to look at one of our higher speed packages to solve the issue. We'd also like to remind you that our speed packages include no data limits, so you can stream and browse all month long with no worries about going over a data limit.

Call us and we'll be happy to answer your questions and help you find the right broadband speed for your needs.

More information regarding broadband speeds and uses is available on the FCC website: <https://www.fcc.gov/research-reports/guides/household-broadband-guide>
